Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

1. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

Claims 16-20 rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention is directed to non-statutory subject matter.

Claims 16-20 claim a computer-readable medium embodying functional descriptive material. However, the claim does not define a computer-readable medium to be a memory/disk and is thus non-statutory for that reason (i.e. "When functional descriptive material is recorded on some computer-readable medium it becomes structurally and functionally interrelated to the medium and will be statutory in most cases since use of technology permits the function of the descriptive material to be realized").

However, the specification (at page 9, section 0034...) indicates – "other forms of propagated signals (e.g. carrier waves, infrared signals, digital signals, etc.) that data may be formatted (stored within the communication/transport medium, i.e. signal) for broadcasting. Therefore, the specification defines the computer-readable medium to be a signal.

A "signal" embodying functional descriptive material is neither a process ("actions"), nor machine, nor manufacture, nor composition of matter (i.e. a tangible "thing") and therefore does not fall within one of the four statutory categories of § 101. Rather, "signal" is a form of energy, in the absence of any physical structure or tangible material.

Because the full scope of the claim as properly read in light of the disclosure encompasses non-statutory subject matter, the claim as a whole is non-statutory, under the present USPTO Interim Guidelines, 1300 Official Gazette Patent and Trademark Office 142 (Nov. 22, 2005).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

Art Unit: 2623

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claims 1-3, 5-8, 10-13, and 15 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Young et al (US 5,353,121) in view of Michaud (US 6,057,874).

Regarding claim 1, Young teaches an interactive program guide system (figures 22a, 22b) including user equipment (figure 22a) with which an interactive television program guide (figure 14) is provided and which includes a video recorder (figure 22a element 206) and a television (figure 22a element 210), comprising:

means for receiving television program guide information for use in the interactive television program guide (figure 22a);

means for selecting a program for recording from the interactive television program guide (figures 2 and 3, column 8 lines 19-22); and means for displaying a message prior to recording the selected program when the video recorder and television are a combined unit (figure 22a, VCR and TV are physically connected via line 250 to form a TV/VCR unit) that informs the user that recording is to begin and asks the user whether to continue with recording (figure 12).

Young does not teach means for determining whether the video recorder and television are a combined unit.

Art Unit: 2623

Michaud teaches means for determining whether the video recorder and television are a combined unit (column 4 lines 49-63). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to combine the VCR model detection means of Michaud with the teachings of Young in order to ensure the use of proper control commands when recording on a VCR device.

Regarding claim 2, when read in light of claim 1, Young further teaches means for canceling the recording of the selected program when the user chooses to not continue with recording in response to the message (figure 12).

Regarding claim 3, when read in light of claim 1, Young further teaches means for receiving a plurality of television channels (column 18 lines 36-38); and means for tuning to the channel for the selected program and directing the video recorder to record the selected program when the user chooses to continue with recording in response to the message (column 19 lines 1-11).

Regarding claim 5, when read in light of claim 1, Young further teaches means for receiving a plurality of television channels (figure 22a element 202 PROGRAMMABLE TV TUNER AND CABLE DECODER); means for tuning to the channel for the selected program, turning on the video recorder, and directing the video recorder to record the selected program when the user does not respond to the message (column 19 lines 5-11).

Regarding claim 6, see analysis of claim 1.

Regarding claim 7, see analysis of claim 2.

Regarding claim 8, see analysis of claim 3.

Regarding claim 10, see analysis of claim 5.

Regarding claim 11, see analysis of claim 1. The claimed circuitry configured to perform the functions of claim 1 is inherent.

Regarding claim 12, see analysis of claim 2.

Regarding claim 13, see analysis of claim 3.

Regarding claim 15, see analysis of claim 5.

4. Claims 4, 9, and 14 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Young et al (US 5,353,121) in view of Michaud (US 6,057,874), and further in view of Roop et al (US 5,619,274).

Regarding claim 4, Young and Michaud teach the system of claim 3.

Neither Young, nor Michaud explicitly discloses teaches means for recording the selected program without directing the video recorder to turn on when the user chooses to continue with recording in response to the message.

Roop further teaches means for recording the selected program without directing the video recorder to turn on when the user chooses to continue with recording in response to the message (column 15, lines 36-48). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to incorporate the teachings of Roop with those of Young and Michaud in order to modify the recording process for when the user is present during recording.

Regarding claim 9, see analysis of claim 4.

Regarding claim 14, see analysis of claim 4.

5. Claims 16-18, 20 rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Young et al (US 5,353,121) in view of Michaud (US 6,057,874), and further in view of Klosterman et al (US 6,078,348).

Regarding claim 16, Young and Michaud teach receiving television program guide information for use in an interactive television program guide;
determining whether a video recorder and a television are a combined unit; providing a user with an opportunity to select a program for recording from the interactive television program guide; and displaying a message prior to recording the selected program when the video recorder and television are a combined unit that informs the user that recording is to begin and asks the user whether to continue with recording (see analysis of claim 1).

Young and Michaud do not teach a machine-readable medium for implementing an interactive television program guide comprising machine program logic recorded thereon.

Klosterman teaches using machine program logic (record daemon) for managing recording functions (column 9 lines 58-59). Such logic must inherently be recorded on some type of machine-readable medium. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill at the time the invention was made to combine the method of using programming to carry out recording functions stored on a machine readable medium taught by Klosterman with the recording functions of the present invention for the benefit of implementing those recording functions.

Regarding claim 17, when read in light of claim 16, please see analysis of claim 2.

Regarding claim 18, when read in light of claim 16, please see analysis of claim 3.

Regarding claim 20, when read in light of claim 16, see analysis of claim 5.

6. Claim 19 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Young et al (US 5,353,121) in view of Michaud (US 6,057,874) and Roop et al (US 5,619,274), and further in view of Klosterman et al (US 6,078,348).

Young, Michaud, and Klosterman teach the machine-readable medium of claim 18.

Young, Michaud, and Klosterman do not teach directing the video recorder to record the selected program without directing the video recorder to turn on when the user chooses to continue with recording in response to the message.

Roop further teaches directing the video recorder to record the selected program without directing the video recorder to turn on when the user chooses to continue with recording in response to the message (column 15, lines 36-48). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to incorporate the teachings of Roop with those of Young, Michaud, and Klosterman in order to modify the recording process for when the user is present during recording.

Conclusion

7. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

Levine (US 5,692,214 A) teaches unattended video recording.
